Victory Capital and Carlos Alvarez College of Business Build Upon Creative Partnership Focused on Student Success

San Antonio, Texas, November 19, 2025 — Victory Capital and the Carlos Alvarez College of Business at The University of Texas at San Antonio have entered the second academic year of their partnership, building upon a strong foundation of student success initiatives established during the 2024-25 academic year.

Victory Capital has implemented a creative approach to expanding programs that support student success, including a financial commitment to enhance undergraduate, graduate and doctoral level students' capabilities through industry-specific training and access to Bloomberg certifications. This partnership has increased Bloomberg certifications at UT San Antonio from an average of 17 certifications annually to 32 in 2024 – with 40 already achieved in 2025.

“Our relationship with Victory Capital has been incredibly important to the Alvarez College of Business,” said Jonathon Halbesleben, Dean of the Alvarez College of Business. “Victory Capital is playing a significant role in two of our most important goals – increasing professional development of our students and providing students with opportunities for experiential learning. Their financial support is creating new opportunities for our finance students to gain hands-on experience with investing tools and is providing a pathway for our students interested in the asset management industry.”

Victory Capital’s monetary donation to The Investment Society, a UT San Antonio student organization, has strengthened the organization’s programming and created opportunities for students to develop as future financial professionals.

“When launching our partnership, we wanted to take a comprehensive approach to enhance student outcomes through mentorship, financial career pathway development, and hands-on industry exposure,” said Carly Thomas, Director of Responsible Business at Victory Capital. “We are excited to continue to find creative ways to help inspire students to reach their full potential.”

Since the partnership’s formal announcement in February 2025, Victory Capital has participated in more than a dozen events both on campus and virtually, including lectures from senior level executives, resume reviews and career workshops. This close collaboration has bolstered the college’s professional development workshop offerings, provided students with a realistic view of future careers and helped students gain confidence in their abilities.

Victory Capital has already committed to participating in nearly 20 events this semester, while 11 Victory Capital professionals serve as dedicated mentors through the Alvarez Mentorship Program.

“Victory Capital’s commitment to supporting our students enables us to work together to develop well-rounded business professionals,” said Halbesleben. “We truly value this unique relationship and look forward to building on the success we’ve already experienced.”
