The Wall Street Journal honors the i-Limb bionic hand

September 14, 2009
The Wall Street Journal honored the i-Limb bionic hand with a Silver in its 9th Annual Technology Innovation Awards.

The i-Limb was one of 500 nominations reviewed by a panel of judges from research institutions, venture-capital firms, and other businesses. Criteria for the awards involved determining the technologies' degree of inventiveness as well as relevancy during a time of economic hardship.

Congratulations to the team at i-Limb manufacturer Touch Bionics. The Upper Extremity Specialists at Hanger are proud to provide our patients with this exciting, award-winning prosthetic technology.

To learn more about the i-Limb and to watch a video of U.S. Army Sergeant Juan Arredondo, a Hanger patient who is thriving with the i-Limb after sustaining life-threatening injuries in Iraq, click here.

To read the Wall Street Journal article on the award recipients, click here.